Frontiers of Transformation. The Slovak Carpathians under Socialism.

The modernization of agriculture, new ideas about recreation or tourism and moreover changing concepts for nature conservation altered many European mountain regions after 1945. But how did this transformation take place in a socialist state like Czechoslovakia? The lecture analyses the effects of state planning and collectivization in mountain regions such as the Slovakian Carpathians. The results are then discussed in the context of a history of European mountain regions.

Tešíme sa na Vás!
